

We very concerned about large media corporations being allowed to own a greater share of the media in any given market. Information about the FCC Biennial Review has not been covered on any of the networks (surprise) nor covered on our radio stations or in our New Mexico papers. The amount of market share that the large media conglomerates own limits our coverage and information choices on a local level. The perfect and ironic example of how the networks limit information on what is going on is the network's silence on this very issue. Shame on all of them - responsible journalism goes down the drain when the self serving networks want to expand their market share and increase profits! The government needs to step in and correct this problem. The amount of media that one company (or its subsidiaries) owns in a particular market should be extremely limited. We need a range or perspectives, not canned network news.
